Entire silver industry is wiped out: Online precious metals dealer

CNBC's Brian Sullivan discusses how silver inventories are selling out, in part because retail investors are buying up silver coins and bars, with Michael Wittmeyer, CEO of JM Bullion, an online precious metals dealer.

Dear Valued SD Bullion Customer,

I wanted to take a moment to provide our customers an important update regarding our company and the state of the Precious Metals industry as a whole.

As you are likely aware, the precious metal market has received unprecedented demand. In the last week, we've seen a massive increase in demand for physical bullion, especially silver. The demand lift is somewhere around 20 times our normal order demand. Of course, the entire industry has felt this demand as well. In fact, Bloomberg TV invited me on last night for a live interview to discuss what is going on in physical bullion right now.

How this has impacted SD Bullion customers:

When your demand increases by twenty-fold over night, this creates a lot of stress on a company's operations. At SD Bullion, we are "flexing" employees from non-essential jobs to jobs that will service you, the customer, as best as we can. This means we have a large percentage of our employees shipping orders, answering phone calls and responding to customer service tickets. Even with our best efforts, you may experience longer than normal hold times and shipping times.

However, you can rest assured our teams are committed to working around the clock to service our customers to the best of our ability.
